Blackguards is an indie VR exploration game in the form of a single-player story, set in a world that combines pulpy fantasy & steampunk elements. It is a game of puzzles and action set against a narrative backdrop. In a fantasy world where magic is real, You Must Discover Why You've Been Named a "Blackguard". You will be aided by unlikely allies as you strive to defeat powerful adversaries, overcome great dangers, and create long-lasting friendships. Experience the world of Blackguards, a place unlike any other, where a hero's journey is a lifetime of play. Controls: There are 3 main modes for play in Blackguards. Navigation - Use the analog sticks to move, left stick to look around the environment and both analog sticks to look up/down and look along/across. From this mode you can walk around a room, look around a room and above, down and in front of you from a distance. Open world - Use the analog sticks to walk around a room. Look left/right/up/down. Free movement - Just like navigation, but free movement. Story: In the story, you are a hero named Tysta who must find out what "Blackguard" means. After some adventures and dilemmas you discover that you are not a hero, but a Blackguard. You are tasked with performing menial tasks in order to make money to pay back the debt to the Guild. You are soon overwhelmed by the tasks assigned and the debt is growing. Something bigger than the Guild is at work and the Guild orders you to kill Vla'hakul, the village Elder. Even worse, you are ordered to do this by King Yliv. The journey of discovery involves a few small puzzles and a couple of large boss fights. And then you are at the end: the city of Meldrath. Tysta is a Boss. The King wants you to kill him. And he has a whole army for you to fight. You choose either fight or walk away. Gameplay: Blackguards uses room navigation to manage an effective storytelling experience. Each room has a few objects that must be interacted with in order to advance the story. Most rooms have at least one door and most rooms have at least one object to interact with. Each object has up to three actions. If you select an object, you will be presented with the three actions depending on what the object can do. Most times this involves using an analog

What's new in Demon King Chapters 2, 3, 4:

For some years now, almost daily I have read of people living with "senior depression", and while I have reflected on what could possibly cause depression in someone over 70, I did not know there could be shame and self-blame. Never thought of, "why would they be depressed at their age? Wasn't I decent?" Then again there always have been "libertarians" to remind me of my "big government" sins. On my Webinars, as part of medical history, I include a section on the "statues". These are the hundreds of thousands of Pompeian's victims, whose maladies included "senior depression". The first known occurrence of "senior depression" was noted in 1973, in the population of young adults, or young seniors, on Valentine's Day. According to "The Medical Journal of Australia", the most common AY Adult BPAD diagnosis in Australia in 1967 "were all due to depression". In 1973 the suicide rate in Queensland increased substantially on February 14th, and in 1964 in the UK on February 14th, the suicide rate in young adults increased and the standard suicide rate declined. I surmise that people with "senior depression" were neglected by their medical people and the community. At the time and for about 20 years, until the idea of a Postpartum Depression study, the "stigma" of "senior depression" was lifted by the public and medical community, though in that era, though not in the US, it was still in some private areas, so it was rarely discussed. Last year I had only just logged on, found out about Psyched Up, then listened to Psych Topics on the connection between PTSD and BPAD and was really ruffled. I figured neither I nor anyone, could possibly ignore Psychiatry's (medical) doctrine in the "taming" of the emotional part of us that being cruelly suppressed by life and unhealth, and I had brought this "senior depression", to the level of PTSD in about 150. There were no other resources for such, since until the Abramson study there was no group that could claim specific "senior depression" in its ranks, to connect with. The study is now online, but essentially one person reports her "senior depression". Mmmmmm, a sparse census. So what to do? What else was there until the Powell study? The "stigma" of "senior depression

In laboratory settings, animals are often housed for a period of time prior to being used as a source of cells for implantation in a transplant procedure. In many instances, the animals are maintained for months or years in cages or other environments in which they are often picked upon by other animals, such as rodents, which are often fed upon by a broader spectrum of predators. This is particularly problematic when the animal intended to be a source of cells is a companion animal, such as a cat, dog, horse, or the like. In order to protect an animal from such predation, it is often placed inside a crate or other environment. However, for many reasons, this may be undesirable for the animal for the duration of the length of time necessary for subsequent care for the animal or for the extraction of the cells. Therefore, what is needed is an apparatus that allows an animal to be securely contained within an environment for a period of time so that the animal does not excessively suffer when the cells are harvested.
Gross torticollis due to C2-D5 discoid spinal osteophytosis in a 74-year-old man. Spinal osteophytosis, or 'Lafosse's syndrome', is a condition of unknown etiology that is characterized by ossification and calcification of the ligamentum flavum, apophyseal junction, spinal ligaments and spinal synovial joints. It is most commonly reported in patients with ankylosing spondylitis. We report a case of C2-D5 discoid spinal osteophytosis in a 74-year-old man with symptoms
